

Change Your Behavior

Behavior change is key to managing your weight. Changing too many things all at once is difficult and stressful. It is better to change one or maybe even two things at a time. Here are strategies to help you change your behavior long-term:

- Decide whether or not you are really ready to change your eating and physical activity habits.
 - What do you need to do to prepare for a change?
- Decide how important it is for you to change.
 - Why are you making the change?
 - What will it mean for you when you have made the change?
- Decide how confident you are to change.
 - Do you have the skills and support you need to help you make a change, and if not, where can you go for help?
- Set short-term goals.
 - Be realistic.
 - Start with an easy change.
 - Revisit your goals on a weekly basis.
- Learn how to support yourself to make a change.
 - Use the materials given to you by your MOVE! team.
 - Find out about community resources that might help you.
 - Gather support from family and friends.
- Expect setbacks and learn how to overcome them.
 - You may have set an unrealistic goal. Put the setback behind you and start again.
 - Remember that even very successful people also have setbacks.
- Reward yourself when you have reached a goal.
 - Do something fun and special for yourself. Be creative.
- Avoid tempting situations like places that make you lose control. For example, all you can eat restaurants.
